Variation in H-1B job approved and actually performed

Variation in H-1B job approved and actually performed ^[1]

Submitted by Chief Editor on Jan 16th 2020

I am getting new job as a developers right now. My new employer is fine to give me offer letter as a Senior Technical Project Manager and keep my job profile as a Senior Technical Project Manager but he wants me to start work as a developer at client place. What all important things I will take care so that I will not face problem with my green card please guide me ?

Video Transcript:

Minor variations in jobs are normal. But the key question is; is there a substantial change. Any substantial change in an H-1B job requires an amendment. Please stick with the truth. Be honest about what your job is and what is required is that you make a good faith estimate at the time you file the H-1B. If there are minor variations, the system will tolerate them, but if there is a substantial change file an H-1B amendment. Also, as long as you are qualified you can take any job for which you are qualified, without regard to what you did before.FAQ in detail...^[2]
