I Had my interview today, in the DO of Atlanta, GA at 10:00. I was really stressed. The officer who called us was a nice young lady in her mid 30's. We took the Oath to tell the truth, she asked for IDS, marriage certificate, previous divorce certificate, she asked where my husband worked, she verified our address and phone number. And finally she asked for most recent taxes for my husband and joint sponsor. We had a bit of a problem with the taxes because we didn't have the most recent tax return/w2 for my joint sponsor or my husband for 2005. She insisted we needed those documents but thank God the officer was really nice. She gave us a fax number and asked us to have someone fax that information to her directly. We went outside for like 40 minutes, and as soon as she had the fax in her hand she let us back in her office.

After going back in her office we imagined we would continue with the interview and the officer would ask us for more supporting docs. It's weird because she didn't ask for anything else. We had prepared for the interview countless utility bills, lease, contracts, bank statements, full album, and letter from friends, copies of I-94, my husband's birth certificate or mine....etc.. But she didn't seem interested in that. She stamped my passport and told me that I would receive my green card in the mail in less than a month. When she said that I finally started breathing. It was so relieving and to say that we spend more time in the waiting room than the actual interview.

The only thing I'm not sure is if I got conditional residence or permanent. I've been married for less than a year. I forgot to ask and the stamp on my passport only says: Processed for I-551 temporary evidence of lawful admission as a permanent residence.

Oh they also took away from me my work permit, she said that I wouldn't be needing it to work anymore and that with the stamp on my passport I can already travel!! yeah. No more worrying for now. My ND was 02/13/06....and my residence approval was 06/15/06!!
